

Mondrian re-painting – a fresh new face Colour options and AGM motions

Most of Mondrian's internal common areas are looking worn and deteriorated. The exterior surfaces of the buildings are in a slightly better condition, but after 13 years wear and tear they could start to show their age and become compromised if left unpainted for much longer.

In order to select a colour scheme that will meet with the approval of most owners a painting committee was formed to explore colour options. Mondrian's original architect Frank Stanisic agreed to consult with the committee without charge.

The painting committee agreed that the exterior colours of the Mondrian should essentially be retained, whereas the purple colour (plum) on parts of Buildings 2 and 3 should be changed to something more in keeping with the adjacent brick tile finishes.

For the interior finishes of lobbies, corridors and apartment doors the painting committee agreed that we should explore alternative options. Frank Stanisic provided a number of colour scheme options, and these were put on display at Mondrian in July. Those who viewed the options were asked to record their preferences. A clear preference was shown for the colour “Harbour Mist” as a wall finish and “Tristan” as a grey alternative to the current “Garfield” orange doors and frames.

These two colours, which enjoy the support of the Mondrian’s architect, have been test painted on an internal corridor of Building 1 so that owners can view the colours in situ.
